Charge for productive capacity—not personas.

AI-agent pricing should create expansion revenue without penalizing experimentation. Bill active production deployments; do not bill drafts, disabled agents, test versions, language variants, or voice/persona choices separately.

Recommended: hybrid pricing

Include a useful number of production agents in each SignalLoop tier, then charge for additional agents. Keep communication and model consumption metered. eCRM remains customer-cell priced; AI is purchased through SignalLoop or an optional RevenueOS entitlement.

Platform subscription + extra production agents + provider usage + hosting/support

What counts as one agent?

A published, enabled production worker with its own job, permissions, knowledge, workflows and monitoring. Alex in English and Hindi is one agent when the job is the same. Prospecting, receptionist and collections are three agents.

Commercial guardrails

- Keep separate SKUs, entitlements, data boundaries and termination rights even when both products are purchased.
- Apply the bundle discount only to recurring software—not setup, usage, cloud, support or implementation.
- Use annual commitments; charge 20% more for month-to-month and avoid a permanent free plan.
- Never promise unlimited AI voice, SMS, WhatsApp, email volume, storage, model usage or custom engineering.
- Publish Enterprise pricing only as “from”; contract SLAs and dedicated deployments after operating evidence exists.
- Review gross margin by tenant monthly and adjust usage envelopes before renewal—not after costs become structural.
